It is difficult to imagine a more daredevil and thrilling adventure than that of two men sliding down a steep, ice-crusted mountain, one in a prospector's pan and the other on a miner's shovel. Yet such a hazardous undertaking was accomplished the other day by Pete McGoff and "Yankee Bill" Murphy, miners and prospectors in the Sierra Madre mountains, when they treeless quartzite mountain, a distance of two miles, with a descent of about 35 degrees, and landed in twenty-five feet of snowdrift in the forty-foot chasm of Cow creek, a few miles west of Grand Encampment, Wyo.

Pete and "Yankee Bill's" love of adventure will brook perils of any kind and at any time for the pure love of sport-perils at which the tenderfoot would stand aghast. Both are known for the chances they take with their lives. The greater the danger the more ready they are to en-ter into it. Peculiar cusses these two rough miners. It was in jesting wager simply that they raced down the mountain side, Pete in the pan and "Yankee Bill" squatting on the shovel, both finishing with a record breaker and what might have been a neck two feet of snow on the day of the adventure to wash out a decomposed quart.-ite which showed rusty iron ore, and which led them to believe would carry gold. In the afternoon it turned so cold tha surface of the mountain resembled glass. It was near sundown when the two men finished prospecting and started to retrace their way down the mountain. The slip-pery, iced snow impeded their progress,

Less than 100 feet down Pete jestingly proposed to "Yankee Bill" that they slide down on the pan and shovel.
"I'll beat you," said Pete, suiting the action to the word by getting into the

"You can't beat me," repiled "Yankee Bill," at the same time squatting down on At first both slid along in a jerky fashion, along at times. Suddenly, however, the two men launched into the ozone and shot down with accelerating speed like comets through space. The sensation they felt ean neither be described nor imagined. They tore down the mountain side like an covered in apparently an instant, when a ridge formation turned them off their course, and they flew still faster at an acute angle. The forty-foot chasm of Cow creek was inevitable, and before they had time to realize the danger they had leaped over its edge, cleared Cow creek and, as if did not exactly need the coroner, but there were not enough plasters and liniments official and his little boy called at our home, on Filial Plety Lane, in Pekin. Father and son were dressed exactly alike-boots of which hung a long garment also of blue silk: waistcoat of blue brocade and skull cap of black satin. In every respect, even a vest pocket edition of his father.

The boy carried a t'ao of books, which I recognized as "The Fifteen Magic Blocks." Now, a t'ao is two or more volumes of a book, wrapped in a singe cover. The one that the boy had contained two volumes. On the inside of the cover was a depression three inches square, snugly fitted with the fifteen blocks. These blocks are made variously of lead, wood or pasteboard. All the blocks are in pairs, except one, which is a rhomboid; and all are exactly proportional, the sides being either half an inch, an inch and a half or two inches in The blocks of Chinese children are not used as in our kindergartens, simply to fa-miliarize the child with geometric figures. course, Chinese children build houses, bridges and wagons just as ours do, but

The first picture my child visitor built for me that afternoon was a dragon-horse. I asked him to tell me about it. The little fellow explained that this was the dragon-horse of Fu Hsi. Fu Hsi was the original ancestor of the Chinese people, and he saw this animal emerge from the depths of the Meng river. On the back of the dragon-horse Fu Hsi described a mountainty horse Fu Hsi described a map containing fifty-five spots. These fifty-five spots represented the male and female principles of
